

Elderberry offers

- ◆ village living in the country with space for farm animals, organic food and flower gardens, and wooded trails,
- ◆ a cozy community of 18 private, energy-efficient, universally-designed homes (small duplexes and quadraplexes) where members can work, eat and play together as we choose, and pursue our unique interests and spiritual paths,
- ◆ a commitment to care for one another as we grow older,
- ◆ a large common house for cooking, group meals, crafts, music, dance, special events, guests and other activities,
- ◆ an inviting central courtyard with a log farmhouse, gardens and paths connecting homes and the common house,
- ◆ a self-managed community where all members have equal voice in decisions,
- ◆ and the wisdom of members who have lived and participated in a thriving consensus-based community adjacent to Elderberry for over 15 years.

ELDERBERRY

is a rural co-housing ecovillage that is a creative alternative to urban living.

Situated on a lovely, old 10-acre farmstead in Rougemont, North Carolina, 30 minutes north of downtown Durham, Elderberry provides a unique model for living simply and supporting one another as we grow older, continuing to enjoy the activities we love with the help and support of close neighbors and friends.
